Mary Beth Collins

With over 15 years of experience as a communications expert, Collins establishes partnerships in the Baltimore community for the advancement of individual lifelong learning. She began her career responding to community interests/ needs with a variety of non-profit organizations, including the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra and Maryland Public Television. Collins continued as a communications specialist for The Maryland Commercial Insurance Group.

Collins's most recent position brought her to academia, working side-by-side with educators for five years as a music education representative. She enjoys offering her communication expertise for the ultimate benefit of learners' success.

Collins empathizes with the issues facing parents of special needs children. With her own child under specialists' care for 10 years, she can identify with the parent whose duties include: research; specialists' appointments/evaluations; difficult decision-making; and concerns balancing effective treatment with long-term effects. Collins has joined other parents to voice concern in Washington D.C. and lobby with policy-makers. Her personal experiences and professional passions fuel a firm commitment to the Baltimore area to strengthen community support for the betterment of its children.
